EDITOR'S NOTE

Glenn Patrick DuPree
Founder and Editor-in-Chief
April 29, 1994

This issue marks the culmination of what was only a concept a year and a half ago. With the inaugural issue being such a success, and this issue being received by such a large readership, our hope of making a contribution to the understanding of comparative and international law has been achieved. The Journal has been extremely well received outside the College of Law, and its text is being placed in full on WESTLAW. Additionally, it is being indexed in the Current Index to Legal Periodicals, and the majority of U.S. Law School Libraries are now subscribers. The Journal also enjoys readership in numerous law firms and corporate law libraries worldwide.

Next Fall's issue will highlight the third annual international symposium sponsored by The University of Tulsa. Receiving world-wide attention and attracting influential world leaders and policy makers, this year's symposium was entitled "Energy, the Environment and Global Economic Growth," and was held in conjunction with The University's Centennial Celebration. The Journal is pleased to be publishing the comments of such renowned participants.

As the semester concludes, the graduating members of the Editorial Board are leaving a Journal that is no longer a new and unexperienced organization, but rather a group of savvy editors and staff that knows how to produce a superior publication which reflects the quality of its authors. The departing Board leaves in confidence, knowing that the ability and dedication of the new Editorial Board is outstanding. The founding editors who are graduating are proud of their accomplishments, their ability to continually clear hurdles in record time, and their achievement in working together in an esprit de corps, unrivaled in any other organization at the College of Law.

We wish the new Board continued success.
