Note to Readers

In this issue, we are pleased to bring you not one but two review essays on Bruce Ackerman's important new book We the People, Volume III: The Civil Rights Revolution, the latest installment in Ackerman's influential We the People project. These reviews start from two quite different perspectives, with the first by political scientist—and leading social movement scholar—Sidney Tarrow (Cornell University), and the second by law professor—and leading constitutional theorist—James Fleming (Boston University School of Law). While we initially planned to publish these essays side-by-side, in organizing this volume, we found that each fit neatly into a different thematic section. Readers interested in comparing the two takes, of course, are encouraged to read them together.
