BIBLIOGRAPHY: CRIMINAL DISCOVERY

The use of discovery techniques in the field of criminal law is still in an embryonic stage, both in state and in federal procedure. In the civil field, however, discovery techniques have long been utilized effectively to eliminate the harshness of unwarranted surprise and to allow adverse parties a greater opportunity to gather information in order to better prepare for their respective roles in the judicial process.

In recent years, a movement for the adoption of discovery techniques similar to those currently utilized in civil procedure has come to the fore in the area of criminal procedure. Few actual changes have been accomplished, though the hue and cry has been gathering momentum.

This bibliography attempts to list all works in this field which have been published in legal periodicals since 1960.* These articles have been arranged under seven generic categories in order to facilitate the further research which is forecast in this area. They are:

- I. DEVELOPMENTS AND DOCTRINES OF CRIMINAL DISCOVERY
- II. GENERAL NATURE OF CRIMINAL DISCOVERY
- III. CRIMINAL DISCOVERY IN FEDERAL COURTS
- IV. CRIMINAL DISCOVERY UNDER VARIOUS STATE STATUTES
- V. CONFLICT WITH PRIVILEGES
- VI. RIGHTS TO PRE-TRIAL DISCOVERY
- VII. COMPARATIVE LAW DEVELOPMENTS

*Lengthy student work is uniformly identified by the word "Comment". Short student work, primarily limited to a discussion of a single decision, is uniformly identified by the words "Case Note". The title of the case has been supplied in editor's brackets as a research aid.
